

The Constantinos Karamanlis Institute for Democracy (CKID)

The Constantinos Karamanlis Institute for Democracy (CKID) was established in January 1998. A non-profit organization, the Institute was founded for the purpose of examining and analyzing social, political and economic issues.

The objective of the Institute is to contribute to the advancement of democracy, civil liberties and private enterprise, while remaining committed to development and social cohesion.

The establishment of the Institute for Democracy is a response to current global changes and the demands of the Greek society. The country's European orientation is not merely a matter of achieving certain indicators. We aim to structural change and solid European policies.
